The explanation provided by the embassy for releasing Mr. Gromyko's letter was that Mr. Haig's message "has been made public by the United States side." The full text of Mr. Haig's letter was not made public, but The New York Times on Jan. 30 did divulge the broad outline of the message.

Stream of Attacks

Officials in Washington specu lated that Moscow was irritated by the harsh statements from the Reagan administration about the Soviet Union and wanted to redress the situation. Io recent days, there has been a stream of press commentaries from Moscow attacking the new administration. Mr. Gromyko, in his letter, said that the Soviet Union shared a wish expressed by Mr. Haig "to work for development of rela-tions" between the two countries. He said, however, that Mr. Haig's letter did not address the questions which deserve priority attention." On Poland, he said that the internal affairs of that country "can-not be a subject of discussion be-the USSR and the USA." He said that if one speaks of "outside attempts to exert influ-ence" on Poland, then it was necessary to note that such interference was being carried on by the United States and other Western states. Mr. Gromyko charged that the Voice of America and other American controlled radio stations were trying to produce in Poland "unfriendly sentiments with regard to the Soviet Union."

"What purpose then is being served by the attempts of the American side to introduce the Polish topic into the Soviet-American dialogue and to make at the same time inappropriate 'warnings' addressed to the Soviet Union?" Mr. Gromyko asked.

New Premier Seen as a 'Polish Gen. Haig'

New York Times Service WARSAW - To the outside world the appointment of the min-ister of defense, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, as premier may seem to be an ominous step toward militarizing the government and prepar-ing the armed forces for a crackdown on the irrepressible unions and their dissident supporters. But here — in the eye of the international hurricane rising over the Vistula — the appointment is not viewed in such alarming terms. Poles are less afraid of their own army than Western analysts suspect, and Gen. Jaruzelski is widely seen as a kind of Polish Alexande M. Haig Jr., a strong figure for troubled times.

The man he replaced, Jozef Pinkowski, was deemed well-meaning but uninspiring and intellectually

There is oo denying the signifi-cance of the move. Never before has a Communist country in the Soviet bloc given its top-ranking officer the top position in government. Communist parties have traditionally kept the military command to one side, a faithful dog but a leashed dog.

Now, the Polish Communist Party has, in effect, admitted that it is too weak to rule in its own name and that it must bolster its 1971, has argued to keep the army waning authority by reaching out out of the conflict all along.

to the institution of law and order. Gen. Jaruzelski's military responsi-hilities, it is believed, include direct command of the "internal front," the 85,000 or so troops reserved for defense of the homeland, which includes putting down domestic insurrection.

Disester Scenario

Among Western analysts, one scenario for disaster in Poland is that a new round of strikes and stoppages would provoke the be-leaguered government into declaring martial law and using the army to break up strikes or run essential strike-bound services. This would likely entail conflicts with civi that could prompt Soviet-led Warsaw Pact intervention.

For this reason, Gen. Jaruzel-ski's appointment, coming after weeks of disruptive labor protests. was read abroad as an ill omen. But Polish observers are more sanguine. They note that a decision to use the military to suppress the unions would be a collegiate decisioo, made by the 10-member Polisburo. Gen. Jaruzelski, who has been a Politburo member since ship does not mean that a decision to use the army would be taken and top party leadership eame in for severe criticism by other committee members. Many of the attacks upon new restrictions on the press and mass media seemed to be thinly veiled attacks upon Stefan Olszowski, a ranking Polit-buro member who emerged in recent weeks as the chief hard-liner. The significance of this is that it shows there are still strong voices on the 140-member committee in favor of Poland's democratic "renewal." They may share the Polit-buro's concern about anti-Socialist forces within the trade union movement, but they are also aware of the dangers of reneging upon the agreements that ended the strikes last summer. In striking contrast to the mood in Washington and West European capitals, where Gen. Jaruzelski's appointment was generally regarded as the Polish government's last chance to get the situation under control without "fraternal assistance" from neighboring Socialist countries, the mood here is one of tempered optimism.

Many Polish intellectuals, even those who feared Soviet intervention last December, now seem convinced that it will not occur or at aged to come through this far and go through so much without it having happened. "It will not mean a new, abrupt hard line," said one party member. "But it could have a stabilizing efhaps because the country has man-fect upon the country." Only now, as the texts of some of the speeches delivered before the closed Central Committee meeting that proposed Gen. Jaruzelski are being printed, has it become clear that the government any more easily or that a hardline advocate of force instead of negotiation is now in the key government position. The same could not be said if "the other general." Micczyslaw Moczar, the former minister of the interior in the late 1960s who is now back on the Polithuro, had been given the post, observers generally agree. Polish journalists and diplomats believe that Gen. Jaruzelski's appointment, dramatic as it may seem, will not fundamentally alter the government's policy, although it may clarify it. They see its im-portance as largely symbolic: When the Solidarity union leaders oext bargain with the administration they will be aware that they are dealing with someone who has the resources of the army at his

A oumber of Europeans have questioned whether harsh remarks by Mr. Reagan and Mr. Haig toward the Soviet Uoion can serve a constructive purpose. Iran Rejects Iraqi Offer for Cease-Fire; Afghanistan Opposes Outside Mediation

By Richard S. Ehrlich

United Press International
NEW DELHI — Iran rejected an Iraqi cease-fire offer Thursday, and Afghanistan for the first time said that it opposed international mediation to end the Afghan war.

The strong statements by the two nations were made on the fourth day of a nonaligned foreign ministers conference, which is exmanding withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Cambodia — without naming the Soviet Union or Vietnam.

The Iranian minister for executive affairs, Behzad Nabavi, said: So long as one single invading soldier remains in Iran, we will never accept a cease-fire or engage

Indeed, there exist quite a number of questions in the Soviet-American relations, including the ment is also fully aware of the fact ones which deserve priority attennon and on which it would be advisable to exchange views. It can only be regretted that such questions, judging hy your letter, have not yet fallen within the scope of attention of the new administra-

As to the certain specific questions touched upon in your letter l would like to say the following: Unambiguous Terms

Right after the incident when the U.S. Embassy personnel was seized in Tehran, the Soviet Union in clear and unambiguous terms came out against such type of acvance of the Vienna convention provisions concerning respect for diplomatic immunity and, accordingly, in favor of an immediate reduring the discussion of this question in the UN Security Council at the end of 1979 as well as in the that it was from these same positions that we addressed ourselves directly to the Iranian leadership.

This, however, is passed in silence. Neither your letter, nor the public statements of the officials of the administration contain a single kind word addressed to the Soviet Union in connection with the position it adopted. Instead, clearly tendentious assessments are being given to what was reported in the Soviet news media concerning the release of the American diplomats. Moreover, it is being done in such a way as to entirely distort in the eyes of the public opinion the position held by the Soviet state on this matter. One cannot belp asking for what reason all this is being done and whether any thought is being given as to how we should regard such distorted interpretations. Now about Poland. First of all I must say in a totally definite way that the internal affairs of this sovereign Socialist state cannot be a subject of discussion between third countries, including the USSR and the U.S.A. If one is to speak, however, of ontside attempts to exert influence on the internal situation in Poland, then it is necessary to state that such attempts do take place and they are being undertaken precisely on the part of the U.S.A. and other Western powers.

In this regard it is sufficient to mention at least the provocative and instigatory transm the "Voice of America" and other radio stations under U.S. control, broadcasting to Poland. Constituting an open interference in the Polish internal affairs, those broadcasts are, inter alia, aimed at generating among the Polish popula-tion unfriendly sentiments with regard to the Soviet Union. There are also facts which indicate that the interference of the Western powers in the Polisb affairs is not limited to the radio broadcasts

What purpose then is being served by the attempts of the American side to introduce the "Polisb topic" into the Soviet-American dialogue and to make at the same time inappropriate "warnings" addressed to the Soviet Union?

Joint Statement As far as Poland is concerned.

we, on our part, are guided by the provisions of the Joint Statement - which, I believe, you are familiar with - adopted last December in Moscow at the meeting of the Warsaw Treaty state leaders. This document spells out a collective position of the Warsaw Treaty countries, including the Polish People's Republic itself, whose leaders participated in that meet-

Since you, Mr. Secretary, did not bypass in your letter the Afghanistan aspect either, I would like to present briefly our position in this respect. Its essence is that there must be a cessation of the armed incursions into the territory of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and of all other interference in its internal affairs, as well as firm guaranties that this will not be resumed. Doing so would also eliminate the reasons that prompted the necessity of introducing into Afghanistan a limited contingent of the Soviet troops requested by the DRA government in accor-dance with the existing norms of international law.

Concrete paths leading to the achievement of a political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan were indicated in the DRA government statement of May 14, 1980. Later, on more than one occasion, the DRA government confirmed its readiness to start working on appropriate agreements between Afghanistan and Pakistan, as well as between Afghanistan and Iran. And it did so again quite recently. The United States, on its part, could, no doubt, contribute to the political settlement if it were to facilitate the beginning of the dialogue between Afghanistan and Pakistan and not to attempt, as is the case now, to raise obstacles thereto.

In conclusion, I would like once more to confirm our readiness for exchange of views on a wide range of issues. I bope that subsequently in our exchange of views a proper place will be accorded to the questions on which resolution the prospects of development of both Soviet-American relations and international situation as a whole are primarily dependent.

Sincerely, A. Gromyko

Mr. Corterier's reference was to NATO's decision in 1979, now un-der attack from the left wing of his party, to deploy new Cruise and Pershing missiles in Western Eu-rope by the end of 1983. The sec-ond aspect of the decision was for the United States to begin arms re-duction talks with the Soviet Union so that the stationing might not have to take place at all.

The promise of negotiations was an important factor in getting the NATO decision approved in mem-ber countries where Social Democratic parties are strong, "With his statements about no talks, and the neutron weapon confusion," Mr. Corterier said, "Mr. Weinberger has made things more difficult than they need be. The question of the stationing of

7-Hour Meeting

In an effort to resolve the difficulties, the party's national executive board met for seven hours, until early Thursday morning, and produced a five-point paper sup-porting the chancellor's policies. Mr. Schmidt himself acknowledged that the meeting could not eliminate much of the hard feeling, and the document was adopted with five leftists abstaining.

Mr. Schmidt was reported to have angrily shouted — his voice was heard by reporters through several closed doors — at Erhard Eppler, one of the leftists who has been attacking West Germany's in-volvement in the NATO decision.

The seriousness of the party oblems was sharply illustrated by the seeming obviousness of the executive board's main statement: The political task of social democracy remains the decisive sup-port of Helmut Schmidt and his government."

But the paper did not provide clear positions on a number of other sensitive topics within the party, it acknowledged the coun-try's economic problems and as-serted that basic changes within the West German industrial strucnecessary to keep products competitive, it but dealt only marginally with the notion that the changes would require disruption of old habits.

No emphasis was given to the development of nuclear power to deal with the country's energy problems. Energy saving programs were called the most important steps to be taken, followed by the development of coal. Nuclear energy is to be used "only when the need for power cannot be covered by other means." The document stressed the importance of the NATO decision on heater nuclear forces and said that the government should urge the United States to hold to factual compliance with the SALT-2 decision on arms reduction.

Neutron Bomb Issue Ignites Reagan's First Foreign Policy Flap

By Robert C. Toth

Les Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON — Despite its emphasis on speaking with one voice, the Reagan administration has been struggling with its first foreign policy flap because in increasingly public disagreement between the departments of State and Defense over what to do about the neutron bomb.

The neutron bomb issue is especially sensitive for Washington because the question of its deployment is an emotion-charged, politically controversial matter in Western Europe. Mr. Weinberger's initial statement supporting the neutron bomb came as an unwelcome surprise to allied governments in Eu-

Caution on Debate

Seeking to calm that reaction last week, the State Department said that U.S. policy was unchanged from that of the Carter administration, which decided in 1978 not to deploy the neutron bomb.

Mr. Weinberger's second assertion of support for the neutron weapons created additional problems for the Reagan administration because it was made only days after the president cautioned Cabinet members not to debate in public about issues that had not yet been decided.

At the White House on Wednesday, Karna

Small, a deputy press secretary, initially said — in response to reporters' questions about neutron warheads — that "this situation is under study" and that "we've been in full and extensive consultation with our allies."

Her words seemed to suggest that the administration was seriously asking members of NATO to station the enhanced radiation warheads in Europe. But another press aide, Lyndon Allin, interrupted

"There have been no discussions with the allies specifically on whether or not it [the neutron weap-on] should be deployed," Mr. Allin said. "This decision [on making and deploying the weapon] has not been fully considered, fully discussed within the ad-

The cable asserted that no decision on the matter had been made, and that any deployment decision would be made only after consultation with NATO

Nevertheless, Mr. Weinberger's remarks created controversy. European newspapers quoted govern-ment officials on the Continent as saying that the neutron issue was most since NATO had decided in 1979 to modernize the theater nuclear forces. Some complained that President Reagan's promise that his administration would speak with one voice. unlike the Carter administration, had not survived long. Moscow registered its expected protest.

The matter seemed to have subsided by weekend. But Mr. Weinberger, in a Washington Post interview, repeated his position and re-emphasized that NATO should be consulted.

At the State Department, Mr. Dyess said that "our position remains as stated in the cable" of last week, "We think the European allies understand that the arms relies of this administration of this sale. that the arms polices of this administration are un-der review," he said. "The secretary of state feels strongly on this issue."

JERUSALEM - Former foreign minister Moshe Dayan has decided in try in elect a new faction in Israel's parliament and possibly spoil the Labor Party's bid to form a coalition after the June 30 elections unless he is offered a dominant role in the new government, it was learned Thursday.

Mr. Dayan, the sources said, is prepared to assume either a civilian Cabinet-level position in charge of all Arab affairs, or even to reactivate his commission on the general staff of the Israeli Army in order to handle the ad-ministration of the occupied terri-tories for a Labor Party govern-tions. It is even more doubtful, some political analysts said, that Mr. Peres would after anybody such sweeping powers unless it were certain that the Labor alignment could not firm a coalition government otherwise.

Mnreover, such a move would incur the wrath of the army command, which has responsibility for the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and would undercut the powers of the future foreign minister, whn is expected to be Abba Eban, foreign minister and ambassador in the last Labor government.

As a result, political analysts said, it appears inevitable that Mr. Dayan will throw a monkey wrench into the delicate balance of the upcoming elections and, in the event of a stalemate and an inability of any party to form a govern-ment, broker a powerful position fnr himself.

Some Labor officials are known to be worried that Mr. Dayan could siphon away seven or cight seats from labor, which could be enough to deprive Mr. Peres of the chance of forming a coalition in the 120-seat parliament, assuming the Likud made a reasonable showing.

There has been concern that Mr. Dayan, 65, may be too ill for the rigors of a campaign. He has had a cancerous tumor removed, and appears drawn and fatigued at times. However, associates said he is ac-tive and energetic, and that the cancer is in total remission. He is chemical therapy, they said.

U.S. Studying Proposals To Reduce Violent Crime

By Robert Pear New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Justice Department officials are developing a package of legislative proposals to increase the federal government's ability to fight violent crime.

Department officials said the proposals included tightening of the bail law, establishing federal jurisdiction over some crimes, such as murder for hire, that traditionally have been prosecuted by state authorities, and developing new means to assist crime victims.

White House aides are studying the idea of a presidential commission on victims of crime, recommended by one of the advisory groups President Reagan, then a candidate, appointed last year. Frank G. Carrington of Virginia, chairman of the panel, said that Edwin Meese 3d, Mr. Reagan's counselnr, was very enthusiastic about such a commission. Mr. Meese was a criminologist at the University of San Diego School of Law before be came in Washington.

Victims' Rights Week

White House officials said Mr. Reagan might proclaim April 20-26 National Victims' Rights Week, to coincide with appointment of the commission.

The emphasis on victims' rights is intended in counterbalance what Mr. Meese, Mr. Carrington and others regard as the courts' longstanding emphasis on the legal rights of defendants. In a speech Sunday at an American Bar Association convention in Texas, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger said the constitutional balance had tipped too far in favor of defendants Violent crime has been described as one of the nation's most serious problems by Attorney General William French Smith and by Mr. Burger. Mr. Smith said at his confirmation hearing last month that his top priority for the Justice Department was in lead a national effort against violent crime. Legislative Proposals

With that cue, Roger A. Pauley, director of the office of legislation in the Justice Department's criminal division, and his colleagues began assembling proposals. Many were drawn fram the criminal code legislation that was approved last year by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but never considered by the Similar proposals would probably receive an even more favorable reception from the Judiciary Committee this year, with Republicans now holding 10 of the 18 seats on the committee. Department officials said they were studying these proposals: Murder for hire could be made a federal offense. Justice Department officials said that federal investigative expertise might help solve a substantial number of contract murders.

 While not advocating preventive detention as such, Justice Department officials see merit in allowing judges to consider the safety of the community when setting conditions for the pretrial release of a person on bail. Windfall: A Progress Report

Most of the U.S. oil companies have now published their earnings for the past year. showing — as perhaps you expected — a brisk improvement in earnings from last year. Or any other year, for that matter. But the companies emphasize that their fourthquarter earnings were in general just about the same as in the fourth quarter of 1979. The suggestion is that the profit curve is flattening out. Maybe so. But you ought to keep in mind that, since last March, the oil industry has been paying the windfall tax — a tax that it has repeatedly described as onerous. damaging and excessive. Even after paying this heavy new tax, the oil industry was making as much money in late 1980 as it did before that tax was imposed.

Many people in the oil industry are press-ing the Reagan administration to repeal the windfall tax. But events since it was enacted last winter have fully confirmed the wisdom of it. The purpose of this tax is not to punish or harass the oil industry - which, we shall state once again, is doing a valuable job very much in the national interest and doing it with great technical skill. The industry argues that, without the tax, it would have more money to invest in exploration for more oil. But the enormous rise in oil prices is already providing the industry with incentives beyond the most manic fantasies of the wildest wildcatters. Drilling is up 30 percent over this time last year. The ending of price con-trols promises still greater incentives and threatens still more oil-field inflation as companies bid against each other for scarce equipment and technicians. Exploration could hardly be proceeding faster.

The case for the oil windfall tax is simply that it provides an essential shock-absorber to the U.S. economy, during a vast and sudden transfer of income to the oil industry from everybody else. It limits the rate at which money piles up in the oil companies casb registers. This year the windfall tax will probably bring in about $19 billion. That's not a small figure. By comparison, the total revenue of all U.S. corporation income taxes is running around $65 billion a year. The truly staggering thing is that the oil companies are paying a tax as large as this one without suffering any decline in net income.

The proper use of the windfall tax is to recycle oil profits back to the rest of U.S. business. The oil companies bitterly object to this concept, with its implication that they are winning their high profits at the expense of other businesses. But something very much like that is clearly happening. The oil people argue that economic growth is not a zero-sum game. Certainly not -- but there is a limit to the speed with which revenue flows can be wrenched toward one sector, away from all the others.

The best reason for a cut in business taxes this year is precisely to offset some of the tremendous weight of energy costs on other industries. A very rapid shift of income to the oil producers can only result in inflation and unemployment elsewhere in the economy. The windfall tax on oil, coupled with the coming reductions in other business taxes, is indispensable to limit the strain on the national economy as oil prices keep rising.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

There are two constituencies, the Reagan administration bas decided, that it does not care to engage in the coming budget battle. They are both botly emotional, fully organized and highly combative: the elderly people who get Social Security checks, and the veterans. Mr. Reagan has moved quickly and firmly to reassure them that their interests are entirely safe. That represents good, cautious political judgment. But as social and fiscal policy, it's not quite so encouraging.

There will be no cuts in the basic Social Security pensions, the White House says including the indexing formula that overcom-pensates them for inflation. There will similarly be no cuts in Medicare, with its health insurance for the elderly, or in the program that guarantees a minimum benefit for the elderly poor. The veterans' pensions are to be equally immune — the most justified and the least justified alike. To those programs the president has added several much smaller ones that benefit the children of poor families, most of them in the inner cities. There you have the list of the nntouchables - the programs that, unlike the rest of the budget, can look forward to the coming year with serene confidence.

The decision on Social Security threatens to make another increase in the payroll tax inevitable within the next several years. If the present indexing formula remains un-changed, the Social Security trust fund will begin to scrape bottom sometime within a couple of years. That point can be staved off, very temporarily, by trimming some of the marginal Social Security benefits. Mr. Reagan apparently intends to do away. for example, with the college benefits for recipients' children. Perbaps the Reagan administration will resort to borrowing among the various trust funds to postpone the evil moment a bit further, as the Carter administration bad intended to do. But Mr. Reagan's retreat on the basic benefits constitutes a warning that, for all of the talk about income tax cuts, an increase in the payroll tax remains a very lively possibility.

As for the veterans' pensions, there was never any question about the benefits to people who were injured in military service. That commitment is beyond challenge. But what about those pensions to nearly two million veterans whose disabilities have nothing to do with military service? Those pensions go only to veterans who are poor, and often the disability is simply old age. It is, in effect, a separate welfare system. Because it overlaps with other welfare systems, there is no reason whatever to perpetuate it - except, of course, that the veterans' organizations consider it their own, and are prepared to defend it vehemently whether it makes any sense or

All together, the untouchables constitute nearly one-third of the total federal budget. If you add the defense money, which can only increase, and the interest on the debt. you will discover that fully two-thirds of the budget is now immune to cutting, by either national necessity or presidential declaration.

Mr. Reagan bas now put himself in some danger of drifting toward the uncomfortable position of his last several predecessors, who watched the budget swell while they complained bitterly that it was uncontrollable. As Mr. Reagan and his colleagues have repeatedly told the country, a budget is uncontrollable only if presidents and Congresses consider it so. To sweat the promised $50 billion out of Mr. Carter's $739 billion budget for 1982 seemed at least possible. To get $50 billion out of a budget of $235 billion which is the residue, after defense, debt interest and untouchables — is a less promising enterprise. As more elements of the budget are declared exempt from the scissors, the impact of the cuts will necessarily fall with greater force on the vulnerable remainder.

GUATEMALA CITY — Everyday the morning newspapers here have more of the same: more bodies discovered, another wave of killing. Since 1966 there have been 30,000 deaths in Guatemala, Since Gen, Romeo Lucas Garcia became president in 1978, there have been 3,000 deaths, with more than 600 people arrested and unaccounted for. According to Annesty Interna-tional, Guatemala has the worst human rights record of any Latin American country. The violence has not reached the crescendo it has in El Salvador today, nor have as many people "disappeared" in as short a time as after the coup in Chile in 1973, but no country can be compared with Guatemala for long-term, systematic assassinauons and torture buried in mass graves.

Guatemala has a long tradition of political violence. The Guatemalan Nobel Prize winning novelist, Miguel Angel Asturias, wrote about it in his 1920 novel, "El Senor Presidente." The violence comes and goes like the seismic eruptions that periodically spill out from Guatemala's breathtak-ing chain of bubbling volcanoes. However, observers agree that the period from 1966 to the present has been unparalleled in its viciousness and cruelty. Revolution in Nicaragua and civil war in El Salvador have, the last two years, lent a new intensity to the conflict.

The overwhelming proportion of the deaths are of peasants. The next largest groups is of students. But during the last two years Guaternala has lost the cream of the leadership of its Social Democratic and Christian Democratic parties and many of its most independently minded professional people. By comparison, the army and the po-lice have lost relatively few.

It is not easy to pinpoint precisely what has triggered the present round of violence. Many observers point to the deposing in 1954, in a CIA-sponsored coup, of the reform-minded President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman. This was fol-lowed by a round of killings that left bundreds dead.

Others point to the decision in the early 1960s of a small group of army officers to take to the hills and start a guerrilla movement among the land-starved Indian community. The army and civilian paramilitary groups ruthlessly put it down, and it only restarted in 1975, fueled in part by the frustra-tions brought on after the Christian Democrats were cheated out of an election victory by massive vote fraud.

Nevertheless, there seems little doubt that the violence today is overwhelmingly of the right. Torture, shooting, strangulation by garrote are the tools used to intimidate the population and maintain political dominance.

The only question is: Who organizes the killings? High officials in the government assure the visi-tor that they are, for the moment, hopelessly caught in the violence between the left and the right. The rightist violence, they say, is caused by death squads like the Ejercito Secreto Anticomunista (Seerei Anti-Communist Army). The government denies having made a single political arrest or holding a single political prisoner.

Michael McClintock, the regional researcher of Amnesty International, bas a different view. He believes he now has firm evidence that most of the killings are government inspired. His conclusions will be pub-

The Polish Dilemm Confronting Reaga

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — If the Soviet Union were on the verge of bankruptcy, would the United States offer its financial aid? Of States offer his rinancial and Or course not; the collapse of the So-viet economy would be proof that Communism does not work, a real-ization devoutly to be wished.

If Communist-run Poland were on the verge of bankruptcy, would the United States offer that nation financial aid? The obvious answer is, again, of course not — Iet the Russians, who imposed the unworkable system on Poland, bail it out. If they cannot pay the costs of their imperialism, let them with-draw to their own borders. But obvious answers may be wrong answers. The Reagan administration is beginning to wres-tle with its first far-ranging foreign policy decision: whether to let the economic chaos in Poland come to a head — thereby saddling the Soviet Union with a foreign aid headache or a debilitating military occupation — or to join with Western allies in taking some of the financial pressure off the Polish Communist government.

The dovish reason to assist the Polish government would be to try to avoid bloodshed between the Red Army and the Polish workers and farmers. The hawkish reason to help would be to impose conditions that would lead to gradual economic and political reform in effect, to begin to wean the Eastern Europeans away from So-

Add to these reasons the financial exposure of banks in Britain, West Germany and France, who are Poland's creditors and who will urge their leaders to prevail on the United States to join some consortium for Polisb stability, or to bring in the International Mone-

President Reagan will be asked to accept a share in the de facto debt rescheduling already under way, as European banks give government-guaranteed loans to Po-land to help avoid default on interest payments of other loans.

But the West cannot be expected to come up with the $7 billion in credit needed this year without some specific commitments from Poland — and the Soviet Union — that the causes of the distress will be cured.

Let's say, for argument's sake, the Russians allow the Poles to join the International Monetary Fund. That is not impossible, since Romania is already a member, as is Yugoslavia.

The IMF would then extend credit to Poland, as it did to Zaire and Brazil, with hard-nosed requirements that the Polisb economy set its house in order. That means curbing imports, stopping subsidies, raising worker produc-tivity and tightening the belt generally.

That is exactly what the Soviet government wants, and the Polish Communist Party wants; but such austerity is exactly what the Polish freedom workers of Solidarity do not want. Lech Walesa wants a five-day workweek, not the current more wages, not less; lower sumer prices, not higher communist Parry will use the requirements as the excuse of Solidarity's demands. Burger's Call to Arms

By Tom Wicker

Burger, who told the American Bar Association the other day that defense against crime was as vital to national security as "the budget of the Peatagon." In fact, it's proba-bly of more immediate concern to most Americans.

With no empty blasts about "getting tough," Mr. Burger said many other things that needed to be said — for example, that the great cost of lowering crime rates would be less "than the billions in dollars and thousands of blighted lives now hostage to crime." Nor is this an elitist view, since crime afflicts "the poor and minorities even more than the affluent."

NEW YORK — Two cheers for where are hard-pressed cities like Chief Justice Warren E. Cleveland and New York to find the money for the needed judges, prosecutors, pobce officers? And in most such cities, by far the most cases are now disposed of by plea bargaining rather than by trial.

Mr. Burger also proposed em-powering judges to hold arrested persons without bail when "a combination of the particular crime and past record" makes it likely that the defendant will commit another crime while awaiting trial. This is of dubious constitutionality; it rests on judges' uncertain ability to predict human behavior and thus poses a high risk of injustice in a system already fraught with it; and anyway, in 1967, the President's Commission on Law Enforcement concluded that there was only a "relatively small percentage of defendants who prea significant risk of flight or criminal conduct before trial."

The commission also pointed out that the best way to deal with that small percentage was by speedy trials. Thus, the chief jus-tice might find more support for concentrating on that proposal, which most criminal justice authorities support, rather than for controversial pre-trial detention.

His argument for limiting the scope of appellate review of criminal convictions to "genuine claims of miscarriage of justice, and not a quest for error" also rests on judges' questionable ability to tell one from the other. And while inmate appeals do flood the courts, most are refused without hearing and with only cursory consideration. Is this really a major cause of high crime rates?

Unlike many reformers, Mr. Burger knows that his proposals, if ct, even when their validity carried out, would send many pted. Trial "within weeks of more people to prison. Princeton University Professor Eric S Goldman calls them Upper Americans and suggests their fundamental credo might be: Let's not be Middle American."

While there is a certain humorous tone to Goldman's observations, the underlying theme is a serious one. The growing influence of Upper Americans, coupled with their disdain for Middle Americans, may make it impossible to develop a national consensus in the United States.

Evolution of a Class

Goldman writes about the evolution of Upper Americans in "Reflections of America," a collection of essays issued by the Census Bureau to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Statistical Abstract.

A former presidential consultant, Goldman estimates Upper Americans make up at least 15 percent of the adult population but "they are influential far beyond their sheer

Strong Impact

The impact of Upper Americans, Goldman says, "is particularly great because of their heavy presence in fields that have to do with the projection of ideas and attitudes— radio and television, the powerhouse newspapers, magazine and book publishing, the leading universities and a far-flung array of service organizations that have talent and Upper Americans have brought much to the country, according to Goldman, including their increased knowledge about public policy, receptivity to change, a more humane artitude toward the disadvantaged and a heightening of taste in literature and the arts.

This is somewhat tempered, however, by the possibility of their avoidance of things Middle American becoming simple snob-

Upper Americans tend to forget that they are just one more special interest group, he says, because they believe they are basing their opinions on superior comprehension. The Middle American reaction to this new group is displayed in a statement Goldman attributes to a Middle American in Denver: Those people make you feel like some kind of clod. They not only usually have more money; they say your ideas are dumh, going to a hockey game is low class, and your wife has a frowsy hairdo." Such personal and emotional division between groups. Goldman warns, can seriously hamper the process of reaching a national consensus on public issues.

Latest Groum

Goldman's essay reports that the Upper American is the latest group or class in a nation formed by Frontier Americans, developed by Urban Americans and largely populated by Middle Americans. Upper Americans have not only gone to college, he says, but "to the kind of institu-tion where the dominant climate of opinion was impatience with, if nns contempt for, the values of Middle America. Upper Americans are avidly on the make, economically and socially "hu avoid the appearance of sheer moneymaking or sheer

Ballet in England

Robert North Takes 'Songs and Dances' on Tour

By Noel Goodwin International Herold Tribune

GNDON - What may be Robert North's last new work for London Contemporary Dance Theatre is an attractive addition to the repertory on its current tour.
"Songs and Dances," seen at Oxford this week, is a further and more claborate stage in North's continuing love affair with Schu-bert's music. It also extends a more romantic image which much of the company's recent repertory seems

The Charleston-born dancer is the designated new artistic director for Ballet Rambert and is presently acting in that capacity for LCDT during the sahbatical ab-sence of Robert Cohan. North's background includes classical ballet (at the Royal Ballet School) as well as a spell with the Martha Graham company, and the combi-natino of influences has given him a distinctive personality as a dancer as well as a romantically inclined style as a choreographer.

"Songs and Dances" is structured to Schubert's isolated quartet-movement in C minor followed by a group of seven songs. The quartet music accompanies a first part subtitled "Out of Doors," with an ensemble of 14 dancers character from poetic interpreta-

breaking into groups of three, four or five. All are barefoot, the girls in multicolored full skirts and make this part a less convincing sashes, the men in shirts and slacks, with bright, sunny lighting intensifying the carefree mood.

Running entries match the mu-sic's initial impetuosity, resolving into more formal groupings rang-ing from a duo of dancers to a double quartet. The lines are fluid, with meetings and partings in overlapping entrances and exits, and nothing very deep or disturbing in the emotional character. At the music's final chords the dancers turn in unison to face the audience and give a formal bow.

Part two is "Indoors," with a singer and pianist on a small stage dais, and a large window structure at the back. The scene becomes an informal source, modern in appearance but with touches of bygone social courtesies. Some dancers stand or sit, listening to the musi-cians, while others perform in sequence to the songs. These are an arbitrary choice, including "Serenade," the "Erl King" as a centerpiece of dramatic mime and dance (a male duo) and sinister silhouettes beyond the window, and The Organ Grinder" as epilogue. The sudden switches in dance entity. There was nevertheless an all-round accomplishment of dancing, led by North himself, and an acceptable level of performance from the musicians involved in each part. A similar parallel is apparent in Cohan's "Place of Change" (1975) which has newly returned to the repertory. This takes the emotional heart-searching of Schoenberg's second string quartet, with its set-ting of Stefan George poems in a means to heighten the choreographic theme of earthly love lifted to something approaching transfi-guration at the end. The main focus of interest is no a duet of surbulent relationships in each of the last twn movements, as the second movement (vividly danced this time by North and Sallie Estep), and a stalking yet benign figure of destiny elsewhere, admirably personified in a wel-come return to performance of rehearsal director Lenny Westerdijk. The company is in Leeds next week and Liverpool in April.

Savile Row Sews Profitably Through U.K. Slump

By Susan Heller Anderson New York Times Service

ONDON - With an unshakable disdain for fashions, fripperies and fads, the exclusive custom tailors of Savile Row are sailing through Britain's worst retail slump in three years with dis-creet prosperity. For the shops that survived wars by stitching uniforms for gentlemen soldiers, to-day's hard times are mere hiccups in their fortunes.

When there's a slump, conservarive fashion and quality become the rule of the day," declared Paul Lewis, chairman of the bespoke, or made-to-order, division of the Linmade-to-order, division of the Lin-croft Kilgour Group Ltd.. a S34.8-million public company whose holdings include Kilgour, French & Stanbury and Bernard Weather-ill of London, among Savile Row's largest establishments. "People want things that last," he said.

The three largest Savile Row companies are Henry Poole & Co... the Kilgour-Weatherill Group and H. Huntsman & Sons, each a product of consolidation. Kilgour. on nearby Dover Street, acquired Weatherill, a prestigious tailor of hunting clothes, and Tommy Nutter, an inspired young designer with a starry clientele. Then, Kil-gour merged with Holland & Lewis, the fabric company, Poole's, on Cork Street, acquired the bespoke tailor Sullivan & Wooley, Huntsman's is part of a group that in-cludes the queen's bootmaker and a company that specialized in made-to-order clothing for chil-

Comparable in Size

While guarding their miouscule differences, all three are similar in size. Both Kilgour's and Huntsman reported sales of $2.4 million for 1980, while Poole was slightly behind at $1.8 million. Exports accounted for 80 percent of Poole's and Kilgour's sales, and 70 percent of Hunisman's. Kilgour's and Poole's have 70 employees each,

The cost of a two-piece suit, depending on the cloth, has doubled in live years to $1,440 at Kilgour's, $960 at Poole's and $1,800 at Huntsman. But Savile Row tailors do not think in such limited time spans, for their suits are built to last at least a dozen years.

They vie for a clientele made up of royalty, aristocrats, businessmen, prominent politicians, show business personalities and "beautiful people," including a bandful of women. "Our average customer is 45 years old." said Frederick Lintott, managing director of Huntsamong its clients, Kilgour's cus-tomers are younger, because of Tommy Nutter, "And they all are Astaire, Cary Grant and Jackie very cost-conscious." Lewis said.
"Even Paul Getty was always get-ing his suits fixed."

Angus Cundey, director of Poole's, says his average customer is between 45 and 55 years old and most likely a businessman. Lintott estimates that 85 percent of Savile Row's trade comes from business

While all the companies are re-uctant to discuss their customers, Kilgour's, whose acquisition of Nutter rejuvenated its image, gets big show business trade, ranging choose a tailor who suits you, find someone whose clothes you ad-mire," suggested Lintott. "Don't go mad, order one suit and make sure you like it."

All three agree that the first made-to-order suit should be a dressy town suit in a dark fabric. Lewis believes a blazer should come next, while Lintott says a gray flannel is more important than a blazer.

"From a tailoring pont of view, a blazer doesn't need to be bespoke," he said. Then, a sportier suit, dinner jacket and topcoat. "Ideally, a man should have one suit for every business day and wear it only one day." Lintott said.

Orton's 'Loot' Is a Delight in French

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss International Herald Tribune

DARIS - It is only 40 minutes from London to Paris, but it has taken 14 years for Joe Orton's play, "Loot," to cross the channel. Its author has long been dead, murdered in 1967, and his play was written before rigid censorship of the English stage was Now adapted into French by Eric Kahane — as "Le Butin" — it has opened at a miniature Montpar-nasse playhouse, the Theatre de Poche, to the general glee of the Parisian press, and this "thumbs up" reaction assures it for lengthy and prosperous local life.

A bad-mannered, macabre farce of the sick '60s, it has survived its period by its exuberant humor, its delight in ridicule and its irresistible impudence. Its dramaturgy is shockingly shabby and laughs at itself. Its makeshift plot maneuvers revolve about a funeral in a lower middle-class household of Catholic persua-sion. The son, a thief, has hidden his "loot" in his mother's coffin which necessitates the removal of the corpse and its constant manhandling. The father is a pious fogy, the nurse is a predatory bitch, the son's chum is a finagling undertaker and the Scotland Yard detective is a brute and a crook.

John Lahr, an American critic, bas published in "Prick Up Your Ears" an exhaustive study of the author. Ortoo's biography warrants dramatization and it is surprising that it has not yet tempted a playwright. The son of a suburban gardener, he studied acting and devised playlets for the BBC. His initial, full-length comedy, "Entertaining Mr. Sloan," including the studied acting the studied ac ing grisly murder, placed him in the West End spot-light. "Loot" followed and be left an unfinished manuscript, "What the Butler Saw," set in a mental clinic.

His own fate was similar to violent incidents be employed in his plays. His rising reputation and the demand for his work — the Beatles contemplated engaging him to write a script for them - enraged his envious and insane flat-mate who, fearing be would be abandoned, battered out Orton's brains with a hammer and committed suicide.

"Loot" is in luck in its current production. Etienne man, which counts several of Presi- Bierry has staged it briskly so there is no time for the dent Reagan's Cabinet members audience to meditate on its improbabilities, and the company has caught its wild, headlong spirit, with Catherine Rich as the sinister nurse, Hubert Deschamps as the doddering papa. Stephane Bierry as the wayward sop, Frederic Witta as his evil companion and the elder Bierry as the agent from the Yard. not one of London's finest.

Simone Valere and Jean Desailly, an acting couple of rare refinement, are to the contemporary French theater what the Lunts were to the Anglo-American stage. They have recruited their own company and are occupying the Theatre de la Madeleine.

They opened their season with a negligible come-die-bouffe by Yves Jamiaque, an arch parody of the mores of Victorian England. It failed to please, but the second item of their program has found favor. It is a charming piece, drawn by Mario Reinhard from the letters of Chopin. George Sand and Delacroix—with Reinhard at the piano for its accompanying music - and is being performed at 6 p.m. on Saturdays by members of the troupe, but without the stars.

The stars are again in their element in a revival of Giraudoux's "Siegfried." This was Giraudoux's first play, adapted from his novel at the request of Louis Jouvet, who directed and acted in it, introducing a brilliant new dramatist to the international scene.

The story of a French soldier who suffers amnesia rom wounds received on the 1914-18 battlefield and, mistaken for a German, is bospitalized in enemy land. There he recovers his physical health, but has no memory of his past. He believes he is German and rises to political prominence in the muddle of post-

From this situation Giraudoux devises a pacifist drama. exposing the futility of armed conflict. This was in 1928, before the Nazi menace had raised its ugly head, but the play bas survived World War II to again deliver its message.

'Siegfried" remains a good play and it is persuasively played by Desailly as its schizophrenic bero, and by Valere and the admirable cast in support. Georges Wilson has directed it at a pace that occa-sionally lags, but this is inevitable as the play has much to say and often stands still to say it.

Multinationals Hostile to Divulgence

Firm Reports New York Bus Talks EEC Union Plan Rouses Business, Labor Hino Motor, a Japanese truck and bus manufacturer, said

athington Post Service BRUSSELS - A controversial European Ecunic Community measure that would effectively alter the ground rules of international capitalism is now the focus of "unprecedented" business hostility, both in Europe and the United States, according to butiness officials here. Such hospility to the Common Market initiative which would give trade union representatives in multinational businesses operating in Europe advance consultation rights on strategic company decisions — is countered by equally vociferous support from the European trade union confederation headquartered to Brussels.

"How much information can a manager be ex-pected to give to the leaders of Communist-con-trolled labor organizations?" asked one business official here concerned about the impact of the proposals in Italy. "He's not going to give confi-dential information to people who are just as likely to slip it off to Moscow us to the local employ-

The depth of feeling sparked by the proposals, termed the "Vredeling initiative" after Hendrikus Vredeling, the Dutch Socialist politician who authored them, contrasts sharply with the usually plodding rhythm of EEC political lile.

U.S. Interests Interested

"It is the only EEC issue that has ever really struck at the heart of American corporate interests," said an official here, who stressed that the basic conflict is the one between traditionally ac-basic consists is the one between traditionally accepted views of capitalism and a new brand of European industrial democracy.

A sterce lobbying campaign between international business and organized European labor is now under way. Sources predict that labor and industry pressure — to be directed at the EEC Commission, its Parliament and member governments — could last themshout 1981 ments -- could last throughout 1981.

Business sotagonism to the EEC proposals, made late last year and soon to be examined by the European Parliament and member governments, is burgeoning amid signs that the European and U.S. corporate establishments are orchestrating a counter-offensive in two key meetings scheduled in Brussels and Washington next week.

Leading representatives of European industry, under the chairmanship of Guide Carli, former governor of the Bank of Italy, will meet here next Thursday at the headquarters of Unice. The mouthpiece of the EEC employers' association. Unice condemns the move as imposing "rigid requirements that can only act as a further inhibiting factor for potential investment." The European meeting will follow a similar top-let of strategy session to be held in Washington on Wednesday with representatives of U.S. business, whose interest in the EEC proposals is termed "phenomenal" by U.S. sources here. The aim of the Washington meeting — which will include groups such as the National Foreign Trade Council and the U.S.-EEC Businessmen's Council — is to formulate opposition to the EEC move, focusing lobbying particularly on European govern-ments and the EEC Commission, possibly via the

For Managers' Eyes Only

Two particularly "dangerous" aspects of the proposals, according to Anne Harrington of the American Chamber of Commerce in Belgium, would be "to strip international management of its decision-making powers" and "to take a first step towards international collective bargaining" with organized labor.

Business sees the proposal as forcing companies to divulge sensitive information, not simply to the local European workforce of multinationals' subsidiaries, but to trade unions which are sometimes seen as major political opponents.

While multinational companies claim to support improved industrial relations, the prospect of transnational union bargaining power has haunted them ever since international bodies like the EEC and the OECD (in its 1976 code on multinational enterprises) have begun setting new standands for employee-management relations.

Acute U.S. business antagonism to the EEC initiative, shared in large part by European industry, is fully matched and partially explained by the equally outspoken backing given it by the politically influential ETUC, a Socialist organization combining powerful labor groups in Britain and Gold prices in London fell about $14 after opening at $494-495.50, down from Wednesday's close of $500.50-502. Dealers said gold drifted down throughout the day to close at $486-$487.50 an ounce in trading described as mod-erate to fairly active.

The French franc ended the day at 5.015 to the dollar — its lowest level since October, 1976 — down from 4.95325.

The guilder finished at its lowest level since December. 1977, at 2.3590, down from 2.331; and the Swiss franc closed down from 1.95345 at 1.9895 for its lowest Aided by high U.S. interest rates, the dollar also rose against all other major currencies, although trading was subdued be-cause the New York market was closed for the Lincoln birthday holiday. In Zurich, gold closed $491.00-

Wall Street Closes Lower; Holiday Curtails Trading

From Agency Desputches
NEW YORK — Computer stocks and some energy issues took New York Stock Exchange prices lower in light trading Thursday as investors continued to worry about interest rates and the economy.

Analysts said investors are worried that strong January retail sales reported Wednesday mean interest rates are unlikely to drop much. Most banks list a prime rate of 1915 percent although Morgan Guaranty and some smaller banks are charging 19 percent. Analysis also said investors were cautious before Friday's release of wholesale price statistics.

The Dow Jones industrial average lost 5.89 points Thursday and closed at 936.60. Declines led advances by a 2-1 margin. With banks closed for Lincoln's Birthday, turnover slowed to 35 million shares from 37.8 million traded

If the key Lombard or discount rates were to be lowered from 9 percent or 7.5 percent respectively, the Bundesbank said, the net effect would be to further weaken the Deutsche mark, accelerate capital exports, and raise import prices.

Domestically, the Bundesbank warned, a cut in interest rates would increase the likelihood of a wage-price spiral as unions saw the international impact of such a step on the domestic inflation rate. But in Bonn, West German Finance Minister Hans Matthocfer called for an internationally coordinated reduction of interest rates.

He warned that "a race for higher interest cates" would not lead to better growth chances but would only limit markets and reduce cmployment possibilities.

Mr. Matthoefer said that it was . very important that the "excessively strong fluctuations" of interest rates in individual countries could

For the year 1980, the Bundes-bank said GNP rose barely 2 percent, compared to the federal statistic's office earlier report of a 1.8-percent rise.

The man with exceptional goals needs an exceptional bank.

What makes Trade Development Bank exceptional? To start with, there is our policy of concentrating on things we do unusually well. For example, trade and export financing, foreign exchange and banknores, money market transactions and precious metals.

Geographically, too, we work mainly in areas where we have something special to offer. This includes the U.S.A., where our subsidizry, Republic National Bank of New York, is one of America's 30 largest banks, It also includes a number of less familiar countries, where our exceptional knowledge of local conditions can be an important advantage for clients.

What's more, we keep our backoffice systems running abreast of our business. You may not notice this directly, but it shows up in quicker decisions and fewer errors.

While we move fast in serving our dients, we're distinctly traditionalist in our basic policies. At the heart of our business is the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also welldiversified, and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertain times.

If TDB sounds like the sort of bank you would like to entrust with your business, get in touch with us. We're ready to serve you in most of the world's financial centers.

The Justice Department had opposed the request, arguing that an injunction would be "premature" because President Reagan has not yet determined what actions to take to implement the hostage agreement, and also that the court should not "interfere with the implementation of sensitive foreign policy" by limiting the president's still studying legal issues concern-ing the agreements and has not yet determined the extent to which rine Midland Bank in New York was issued on June 13, 1979. EDS filed its lawsuit against Iran on Feb. 23, 1979, charging Iran with failing to make payments for several months for EDS's work in helping computerize Iran's national health, welfare and social security records under a three-year contract signed in 1976.

The broad legal and constitu-tional challenges put forth in the 41-page brief filed by EDS go to the core of Mr. Reagan's power to implement his predecessor's international agreement.

The president has broad constitutional and statutory powers to conduct foreign affairs without in-terference from the courts. But no president has attempted to sweep away court orders and lawsuits by decree in order to ship out of the country hillions of dollars of foreign assets claimed by Americans, as Mr. Carter agreed to do. EDS argues in its brief that "in its understandable zeal to end the illegal imprisonment of Americans by defendant, the government of Iran, the executive branch has adhered to agreements which, if applied to EDS, will clearly cross the outermost boundaries of the executive's legal powers under the Constitution and statutes of the United States."

Japan Studies Export Aid To Compete With Western

TOKYO - Japan is studying measures to match credit terms given by Western nations on industrial plant exports, official Japaffere sources said. Some Western nations have been giving long-term, low-interest loans recently out of line with in-ternational guidelines for official export credits, placing Japanese firms at a disadvantage in competing for orders, the sources said.

The sources said France has given some developing countries ex-port credits mixed with official deelopment assistance, which was not subject to OECD guidelines.

Thus, Japanese measures are expected to include combinations of credits from the Export-Import Bank of Japan with long-term, low-interest ven loans from the Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund, a Japanese government body for economic assistance.

Badische Kommunale Landesbank, Mannheim, one of Southwest Germany's leading banks, recorded satisfactory results in 1980. The balance sheet total surpassed DM 20 billion, rising from DM 19.3 billion to DM 20.3 billion, an increase of 5.1%.

Lending activity accounted for a significant proportion of the Bank's growth in 1980: Loan volume was up 10.5% rising from DM 13.3 billion to DM 14.7 billion.

Funding was conducted primarily through bonds (DM 2.9 billion) and SD Certificetes (DM 0.4 billion). At year-end, the volume of the Bank's own paper in circulation was some DM 10 billion.

In 1980, BAKOLA broadened its international service potential by opening Badische Kommunale Landesbenk (Switzerland) Ltd., in Zurich. The wholly-owned subsidiary offers investment counselling, portfolio management and trustee services, and deals in currencies, precious metals and securities.

Badische Kommunale Landesbank International S.A., the wholly-owned Luxembourg subsidiary, further strengthened its Eurobanking activities, with emphasis on Eurocredits as well as money market end foreign exchange operations.

Forfaitierung und Finanz AG (FFZ), Zurich, expanded its market position in its specialized areas of activity, especially non-recourse export financing (à forfait).

Badische Kommunale Landesbank is a regional universal bank linked to Germany's powerful network of savings banks and performing cantralized functions for Baden's Sparkassen.

The Secret Passion By Joseph Epstein. Duston. 312 pp. $13.95

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

T'S a tricky semantic game that the critic Joseph Epstein plays in his new book "Ambition: The Secret Passion," an investigation of American attitudes toward achievement by the editor of The his last biographical sketch. American Scholar magazine and author of two previous works of nonfiction, "Divorced in America" and "Familiar Territory." When he talks about the decline of amhi-tion in the United States, he really has two senses of the word "ambi-tion" in mind, which he seems to alternate at his convenience. On the one hand, he uses the first definition of ambition in Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary, which is "an ardent desire for rank, fame or power. Of course, we take a dim view of that sort of ambition, which is almost a negative attribute. People have been doing so since the dawn of Western civilization, as any an-thology of quotations will reveal, where, from Quintilian's "Ambition is a vice, but it may be the father of virtue" to Oscar Wilde's "Ambition is the last refuge of the failure," 9 out of 10 references treat ambinon pejoratively.

Falling Into the Trap

On the other hand, Epstein treats ambition in a more functional sense, as "the fuel of achieve ment" — to quote his own defini-tion — without which none of us could get out of bed in the morning, let alone fight and win the day's battles. So his trick is to argue, first, that ambition has fallen on hard times in America, mean-ing ambition in the pejorative sense, and to say, then, that some people are still getting things done, which means the best people still have ambition, in the second sense of the word. If we are not careful, we fall into Epstein's trap and find ourselves mumbling with him at the end: "Yeah, what's the matter with you, dissenters of America? Why aren't you behind those who are getting things done?"

What is Epstein really trying to say? It takes a while to see, because his book progresses very cir-cuitously. It begins by breaking down the concept of ambition in its broadest sense, into its implications, and then proceeds to exam-ine in a series of chapters such big ideas as goal setting, success, mon-ey, power, social class, failure and work, among a number of others.

particularly as they have been treated in American literature. Each of these chapters is frequently and somewhat arbitrarily interrupted by one- or two-para-graph anecdotal items titled "Curiosity Shop" and by lengthier bio-graphical sketches of such promi-nent Americans as Benjamin Franklin, Henry Adams, John D. Rockefeller, the du Ponts, the Guggenheims, Henry Ford, Henry R. Luce, Edith Wharton, the Kennedys, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Adlai E. Stevenson and Wallace Stevens. The effect is that of a three-ring circus, with crincism, anecdote and biography doing their turns simultaneously, pantomiming the history of American popular culture and why Money, Fame and Power fell out of favor with those who purvey the American Myth.

None of it is a penalty to read. Epstein is a discerning critic, whose muscular prose is noth lucid and discriminating. The "Curiosity Shop" items - which range from a vignette set in small-claims court to an acid description of the old "What's My Line?" as a television program designed to show off "the stupidity of the rich" — are invari-ably fun to examine. The sketches famous Americans, though mostly huilt from prominent hiog-

On the diagramed deal, South, a member of the Portland who worthily inherits all these tradi-tions, could see substantial slam prospects when his partner opened three spades. The best way to explore was far from clear. Even if there are two quick club losers the defenders may not lead that suit and there will probably be discards

A few expert partnerships use asking bids in this position and would bid four clubs. This apart, there is a good case for a jump to five spades, asking North to con-tinue with a good trump suit. South's choice, five hearts, was a good common-sense move, fully in keeping with the Portland style of

There is no one more capable to build a foot-ball team than George Allen. Why he isn't coaching is a mystery.

Yet there is an undercurrent of something else: the Allen imagine, graphically underscored by Rosenbloom when he fired him. Fans don't care about eccentricities, idiosyncrasies or methods, but apparently owners do.

One NFL executive cites Dan Recves' remark: "It was more fun losing with other coaches than it was winning with George."

general manager were one and the same — Dan Devine — and the Redskins did win, 17-6. Upon his latest departure from the Rams, Allen was mocked for his Queeglike concerns having crackers in the same food line as the soup and a certain kind of toothpaste in his bethroom.

"I'm sure I rubbed a lot of people the wrong way," he says. "They say, 'Boy, this guy's mitry. What difference does it make? We're gonna win

"But those are things that make you organized. There were so many things that didn't make any sense. Nobody cared."

Allen said he was "astounded" to learn the Rams didn't have a copying machine that could reduce. "I don't like this size paper," he says, waving a long, legal-size statistical sheet. "It doesn't fit into notebooks. It takes up too much storage room. I prefer 84-by-1 I."

Subject: $30-Million Outfit

But he ran into opposition when he asked for different machine. Said Allen: "And we're talking about a $30-million organization "I've been that way all my life, not just when I came to the Rams. I was that way at Morningside College. I haven't changed. I don't want to change. Those things are important to me be-cause they're all part of winning. But some poople don't like that." But some believe Allen carries it to unbear-able extremes. Says another NFL executive: "George isolates himself from everybody, including his owner and other people in his own organization. He has a tendency to put himself and his team in a little cocoon. That is part of what Allen and others mean when they say his next job will have to be "in the right place at the right time." If the second

Ram experience taught one lesson, it was that he can't function effectively without total control of football operations. Steve Rosenbloom, the former vice president and general manager at New Orleans, indicates that his father had been alone in wanting to hire Allen in the first place. "I wasn't averse to having George Allen as coath," Rosenbloom says, "but you had two

My premise was that it pieces of paper myself." The Packer coach and wouldn't be a happy marriage. Sooner or later there would be a collision. As it happened, it WAS SEXTHER."

Ed Hookstratten, then the Ram legal counsel (and who negotiated Allen's contract with the Redskins), says he thought the Rosenbloom-Allen alliance would succeed.
"I know C.R. later regretted the decision [to fire Alien). He thought he should have kept him. At one point, he seriously considered rehiring him," Hookstratten said.

That, the lawyer says, was after Ray Malavasi's first season, when the current Ram Coach was hospitalized for an attack of high blood pressure. Hookstratten: "C.R. said, "I Ray is not going to be able to return to coaching, I'm going to get George back in here." That may be as close as Allen has come to returning to coaching. He says that when Reeves fired him after the '70 season, he had "five other offers" besides the Redskin job.

Now, it seems, they have all dried up — at least the ones tailored to his methods or compatible with his past. Allen once was tight with Redskin Owner Jack Kent Cooke, but when 'I haven't changed. I don't want to change. Those things are important to me because they're all part of winning. Some people don't like that.'

Cooke fired Jack Pardee recently be kept Bob

Beathard as general manager and hired Joe Gibbs, a San Diego Charger aide, as coach.

There was a falling out with Edward Bennett Williams, who was then running the Rodskins, when Allen left Washington after the '77 season in a dispute over the 5-percent stock purchase option in his original contract.

But Hookstratten dismisses Allen's conflicts with three different managements as factors in his unemployment.

strong personalities involved, each used to running his own ship. My premise was that it wouldn't be a happy marriage. Sooner or later the losing organizations they continually make the same mistake. Those owners think they can run the team and win just because they've been in the league a long time. The Giants or lets should here George. He would min those teams around in one year."

But one NFL executive says, "I couldn't see him with Wellington [Mara, the Giants' owner]. If I were picking a spot, it would be more like Green Bay, where you have a committee,"

"I don't know where or when, but I think his day will come again," says Art Modell, owner of the Cleveland Browns.

Know-It-All

Allen is ready. A friend says, "Nothing hap-pens in the National Football League that he doesn't know about."

At his spacious house overlooking Malaga Cove on the Palos Verdes Peninsula, his phone bill runs to more than $500 a month. He talks frequently in contacts around the league and gets press releases and statistics from every cinb. Through his CBS work, be has built a vi-deo-cassette library of game films. All that could be said for any hard-working TV analyst, but there's more.

He has files on coaches currently unemployed, trainers, equipment men, weight coaches, administrative coaches and college coaches he might want to interview, plus a file on pro assistant coaches be could approach should he have to organize a staff in a hurry.

Allen apparently is not hurting financially. Besides his CBS income ($60,000 a year), three-quarters of his $600,000 Ram salary is deferred—he has been paid only $50,000 each of the last three years and will receive $450,000 over the next 10 the next IO

So be is playing coy. He says he has not applied for any coaching jobs. "I would never do that. They know where I am. I don't think I'm being blackballed. I just don't think the right situation has come along. There was one job recently where if I had agreed to terms, I probably would have been back at it. But there were other concessions. "I can't accept a jub when all my life I've proven that by having certain authority you can be successful. The teams that have won have been ones where the coach calls the shots. Coaching isn't just what takes place on Sunday. It's making decisions on who to keep and who

Evaluation Central

"Good coaches are also talent evaluators, and I'm not talking about just evaluating players, but equipment men, film men, switchboard operators, whatever,

Coe Sets Record Of 1:46 for 800

The Associated Press COSFORD, England -Sebastian Coe broke the world indoor record for the 800-meter run here Wednesday night with a clocking of 1 minute, 46 seconds, lowering by four-tenths of a second the record set by Italy's Carlo Grippo four years ago. It was Coe's first indoor 800 since winning the European title in 1977. The victory came in an track and field meet be-tween teams from Britain and East Germany; the East Germans won, 122-85.

After his performance, Coe, who bolds the outdoor 800 record and is the Olympic 1,500-meter champion, said, "I didn't realize I was in this kind of shape," Andreas Busse of in the 800 with 1:47.1 while teammate Detlef Wagenknecht was third in 1:47.6.

Dreamer's Progress

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — When I was 11 it was a very good year. I roamed the open city, carefree as a swallow and planned to rescue Miss Yaskell, who taught fifth grade, from pirate captivity. Afterward, Fiorello La Guardia would ride beside me in the ticker-tape parade up Broanway crying.

How's he a doing?" John Da-eey, who had blackened my eye in the schoolyard. would throw himself on the car to beg forgiveness and I would stop the parade and whip him within an inch of his life. I was 11 and it was a very good year, except that Miss Yaskell never got captured by pirates and John Dacey caught me daydreaming in the park one day and punched my nose.

When I was 17 it was an excellent year. I dreamed of taking the beauteous Betty Ballou to the senior prom in Uncle Don's Chevroles coupe, but didn't learn to drive in time and had to take Caroline Swigger instead on the streetcar.

When I was 25 it was an extraordinary year. "You realize of course that you'll never make any money working for this company," said Earl McAdoo, the first tycoon I bad ever mei. "but the experience will be invaluable."

"Money!" I cried. "Do you reckon me so unworthy that I can aspire to nothing more valuable than

When I was 29 it was a truly splendid year, "Have you found nappiness yet?" asked Caroline Swigger as I took her home one night on the streetcar.

"Caroline," I said, "you want perfume and pearls. You will never find them with me," Yes, I had seen that happiness was a childish bauble, had learned that experience it worthless unless transmuted into art, had abandoned the steely-eyed McAdoo and committed myself to the creation of a novel that would leave Edmund Wilson flubbergasted.

When I was 33 it was an astonishing year. I took my completed novel to the houest literary agency in New York. The Beauteous Berty Ballou Ten Percent Corp.. Ltd. Betty rode in limousines and her hair came undone in the wind tunnel created by the Time & Life Building as she changed from her Cadillae to her Conunental. "Your novel," she said, "must be a work of genius since I would be too embarrassed to show it to any publisher in town. Come see me when you've done something a little more Mickey Spillane."

When I was 44 it was an absolutely glorious year. I would take Caroline Swigget home on the streetear, and she would say, "If I get off and walk the last five blocks, maybe somebody will try to mug me and you can fulfill your childhood dream of heroism by rescuing me." And I would say, "Can it, Caroline. I'm 44 years

When I was 46 — "Marry me," she would say, "and fulfill your youthful dream of happiness." And I would say, "I have an embarrassing confession to make, Caroline. I suil baven't learned to drive. I wouldn't be able to get you home with the groceries from the

When I was 49 it was a very mediocre year. The last streetcar had been destroyed by the high-way-and-bus lobby and Caroline had bought a car.

"If we got married," she would say, "I would let you practice driving my car and you would fulfill your youthful ambidon for experience." And I would say, "Caroline, Caroline, I'm 49 years old for God's sake." And Caroline drove out of my life.

When I was 57 it was an absolutely breatbtaking year. I would stand at the streetcar stops dreaming of the old days and Betty Ballou would ride by in limousines.

Once she came riding up Broadway in a ticker-tape parade, having just sold the rights to "The Duchess With the Mossy Sheets" for $16 million. I threw myself on her car to ask forgiveness. "Betty," I eried, "I was an idiot to hold out for fame beyond the grave. I'm 57 years old and I'm ready for the big bucks."

Betty stopped the parade and whipped me within an lach of my life while Mayor Koch cried, "How's she doing?"

New Light on Creatures That Glow

By Joseph Williams

New York Times Service

New YORK — Just as visitors flying into New York tors flying into New York are often dazzled by the city's fliekering lights on a clear night so have scientists been fascinated and perplexed by the dim glows and multicolored lights produced by an enormous variety of animals in forests, in caves and in the ocean depths.

From studies on the common lightning bugs captured by many a child on a warm summer night to the clusive "flashlight fish" tropical waters, insect specialists, biochemists and other scientists have gained new insights into this light-producing ability, known as biolumineseenee, furthering their understanding of animal and insect communica-

Oceans are the home for many of the world's luminous ereatures, which use the trait in a variety of ways. For example, sever-al species of shrimp can regulate their bioluminescence, depending on the water temperature and color, to disguise their predatortempting silhouettes.

Bacterial Light

A number of fish species in which bioluminescence is actually produced by bacteria boused in a specialized organ, rather than by the fish themselves, have caught the attention of California researchers, including John E. McCosker, director of San Francisco's Steinhart Aquarium, Ed Miller, aquatic biologist at the aquarium, and Kenneth H. Nealson of the Scripps Insulu-tion of Oceanography in La Jol-

At the aquarium recently, Miller showed a visitor a tank, lighted with a dim red bulb, in which specimen of the Photoolepharon, one of the genuses of 'flashlight fish," darted furtively above and around rocks, frequently revealing its sinister-looking greenisb light organs. Researchers have found that these fish are unusual in using their bioluminescence for communicative, defensive and offen-sive purposes, Miller said that in a typical encounter, the fish will flash its light organ, leaving an image momentarily imprinted on the retina of a predator's eye while the fish itself escapes. It is under low-oxygen conditions, also believed that the biolumines- and slows their reproduction, also believed that the bioluminescence is an evolutionary adapta-tion for nighttime foraging, when more food is available. The fish are quite photophobic, Miller pointed out, and a sign on the tank prohibits flash photographs, since the sudden shock can kill

For reasons not yet known, possibly because of a nutrient de-ficiency, the fish have a tendency to lose their lights in captivity. in the flashlight fish, the bac-teria responsible for the light are stored in a pouchlike organ, and keeping their numbers at a level that the fish can support. In a practical application of the research Nealson recently received a Navy grant to measure the amount and color of bioluminescence in the ocean. The Navy wants to see if bioluminescence could interfere with laser communications to submarines from saiellites. In organisms, light is generally produced in one of two ways: Two ehemicals generically known as luciferin and luciferase

In South America, there is a railroad worm that has red lights in its head and green lights all along its back. They walk around with red lights on and when they are touched or stimulated they turn on the green lights.

researchers are keenly interested in the symbiosis between the fish and the bacteria. "The fish can't see without the bacteria and the bacteria can't live without the nourishment the fish provides," said McCosker.

It has proved difficult to cul-ture the bacteria outside the flashlight fish because of their need for nutrients and, possibly, other unknown substances in the host fish. Cultures bave been successful, however, with bacteria from several other fish, including the Japanese knightlish.

Much of Nealson's work in bioluminescence has focused on this species. In an interview, Nealson at Scripps said that the fish's light organs are highly evolved structures with an extensive vascular system. In addition, each fish species has a particular species of bacteris and a different means of regulating the bacteria's light output, mainly through the control of oxygen.

For the knightfish, Nealson has proposed a model in which the lish provides glucose to the bacteria, whose waste products are used by a group of cells in the light organ simultaneously with oxygen. This process regulates the amount of light produced by the bacteria, which glow better combine in the presence of a catalyst, usually oxygen. In the other system, a complex protein that contains luciferin and other chemicals reacts, or binds, with

At the University of Georgia in Athens, Milton J. Cormier has been studying a protein-type sys-tem in hydrozoan coelenterates, an animal group that includes jellyfish, to learn how the proteins link nerve signals to the onset of Cormier said that be and his colleagues are developing methods to use the proteins to monitor, with special detection equipment and computers, various cells' levels of calcium — an es-sential nutrient for many organisms, including bumans.

Fireflies' lights are produced by a luciferin-luciferase reaction that uses oxygen and adenosine triphosphate, an energy-storing molecule found in most living cells; this reaction has found some medical use, including a heart disease test. A task confronting researchers is determin-ing whether other chemicals. such as proteins, are the chemical basis for various colors of firefly

Fireflies, particularly their bebavior, have been a prime interest of Prof. James E. Lloyd at the University of Florida at Gainesville. His 18 years of insect stud-ies have included trips to swamps in Thailand and South American jungles.

Most firefues, he pointed out. Most Intellies, he pointed out, tend to be herbivorous, caung flowers or, in his lab, "a little piece of apple." However, the carnivorous females in the Photuris genus attract and devour males of other species by imitating the other species flash patterns. Photuris males have been found to copy the flashing of found to copy the flashing of other species. This enables them to lure Photuris females, probably for maung.

Lloyo said that he observed a new aspect of Photuris behavior recently in southern Mexico: Photuris females eating craneflies, other beetles and possibly a mosquito, all of them attracted to a sticky substance on brown flowering seeds of six-to sevenfoot-tall grasses.

Color Variations

Research by William H. Bigg-ley of Johns Hopkins University, with Lloyd and others, is revealing the uses of wavelength, or color, differences in firefly flashing. Yellow-flashing fireflies tend to come out early in the evening, while the green flashers come out late at night. According to Bigg-ley this may be an evolutionary adaptation by which the firefly's visibility is maximized to other fireflies in different light condi-nons. "Pressure is intense for male fireflies to find and mate with females," he said, pointing out that a species would have "& distinct compentive advantage" if the color differences aid mat-

Color is a factor in other species, as well. "In South America. there is a railroad worm that has red lights in its head and green lights all along its hack," Lloyd added. "They walk around with red lights on and when they are touched or stimulated they turn on the green lights." He postulated that the red lights are used for vision and that the green lights are turned on when the worm is stimulated, possibly by a preds-

Lloyd said his main interest is the development of a general theory of insect and animal communication. As for fireflies, be said: "They're awfully nice animals and I like the time of night."
